ICE CREAM AND FRIES

The weird combination of ice cream and fries was surprisingly good. While making this a weird combination, I felt excited to try it. Due to the cold ice cream and the freshly baked fries, the temperatures worked together to make a great combination. The saltiness of the fries complements the sweetness of the ice cream. I liked it as a one-time thing, but I wouldn't go out of my way and eat this combination.

PEANUT BUTTER AND PICKLE SANDWICH

Peanut butter and pickles should stay away from each other. While I was assembling it, I was thoroughly disgusted. I didn't want to try the sandwich. Combined, they are just gross. The creamy texture from the peanut butter was not good when blended with the sour taste of the pickles. I was really scared to try it; it didn't look appetizing. I would never eat it again; it was 100 percent disgusting.

CHEESE PIZZA AND CHOCOLATE

Pretty high up on the list of difficult tasks is finding someone who doesn't like pizza or chocolate. The two foods are beloved, so it only makes sense to combine them into one dish. While cooking, the chocolate and the cheese pizza weren't very pretty to look at, but the taste made up for the ugly appearance. The cheese pizza and chocolate made it more appetizing to eat together since the chocolate wasn't overpowering the cheese pizza.

OREOS AND ORANGE JUICE

Dipping Oreos in milk makes the cookie soggy, but dipping Oreos in orange juice keeps it soft without breaking into wet crumbs. Without trying it, I thought it was pretty disgusting. The sour taste of the orange juice doesn't mix well with the chocolate taste of the Oreos. The after-taste made me gag. I didn't expect it to taste so strange. So, I'm going to stick with dipping my Oreos in milk.
