As she attempts to hang onto her sled with her right hand, Richland sixth-grader Ava Porter tries to steady herself with her left hand while gliding off a snowbank in her front yard on Tuesday. Porter, along with her brothers, decided to do some sledding in the powdery snow that fell earlier in the week. In total, Stoddard County received nearly a foot of snow during the back-to-back storms. "That was awesome," said Porter. "I loved going over the snowbank, but it hurt when we landed on the frozen dirt."

During a break from his classes, Richland senior Tanner Freeman tries to catch snowflakes on his tongue during a break on Wednesday, Jan. 27. Less than one inch of snow fell and was melted by the end of the school day, but it was the first snow that stuck in the Richland School District in more than five years. "I really enjoyed it," said Freeman. "It was the first legitimate snow since I've been in high school."
